I believe Hawaii's Second Congressional District needs a forceful, energetic advocate to fight for a strong, sustainable economy. I want to respond to the call from Hawaii's citizens for more public servants and fewer special-interest politicians.

For eight years as a member of the State House, I've focused on economic, political and environmental change. We've created more than ten thousand clean, high-paying jobs through ACT 221, we've helped to save Waimea Valley and other precious open areas, and we've made dramatic improvements in public education.

Politics is only one of many ways that people serve their community. In my professional life outside of the legislature, I work in the nonprofit community, helping to organize community volunteers, provide school supplies for needy kids and basic living necessities for some of Hawaii's poorest families. This experience keeps me grounded in what really matters – family, community, and the aloha spirit.

My desire to serve you in Congress is about making Hawaii a better place for all of us. In taking on this challenge together, my wife Linda and I decided that our campaign would be about more than just one individual. Our goal is to take Hawaii's values to Washington in the most energetic and effective way possible.

I would be honored by your vote, and I ask for your support on election day.
